ABSTRACT: The combination of discourse markers, especially in colloquial conversations, is one of the less addressed questions in this otherwise lively field of study. This paper attempts to offer an answer to that issue, on the basis of the theory of discourse units developed by the Val.Es.Co. Research Group. Once a conversation is segmented into units, notions such as initial position or final position can be meaningfully addressed, as initial or final are referred to a given unit. Likewise, when taking into account the discourse units in which different Dms appear, cooccurrence can be distinguished from real combination among Dms. This approach is exemplified with the Spanish DM bueno.
